James Bowen Wilcox
Caya Wilcox

4/12/2024

GidgetWorld

How To Play

IMPORTANT NOTE: You must have the processing foundation sound library installed.

At the moment, I have not completed the ending to GidgetWorld, but the entire game up to that point can be played, though it needs a little rebalancing. GidgetWorld is a clicker/tycoon game, where the player must accumulate various resources through clicking and creating various industrial resource producing facilities, until they can afford to construct a rocket ship and fly away from GidgetIsland.

1: Get some dirt! Click the small dirt mine to get one dirt per click. You can move your camera around with WASD to see the whole of GidgetIsland in its glory.

2: Buy some Gidgets! Click on the GidgetHole with 10 dirt (the price goes up by 10 every purchase) to buy a Gidget. For every 2 Gidgets you have, you get +1 bonus dirt for clicking on the starter dirt mine.

3: Industrialize! With your newfound wealth of dirt, you can purchase automated stone or dirt mines that produce one of their relevant resources a second. You can purchase these structures by clicking on any land for sale plot then clicking the structure you want to purchase when the menu pops up. You can also get rid of the menu by clicking the little red X, though it won't vanish if the X is directly above another land plot because it registers the menu close then immediately reopens it (bug I need to fix).

4: Buy better structures! Use your resources to buy different buildings that produce better resources, and so forth. If you want to clear up any of your old buildings to space for better ones, you can click them then click the destroy button in the pop up menu. Warehouses are supposed to increase the max amount of any resource you can have, but they are currently useless as I have not added that feature yet. Smelters consume 5 ore to make 1 ingot (they will consume oil as well once I rebalance the game).

5: Become rich!

6: Leave the planet in search of adventure! [NOT IMPLEMENTED].

Construct a rocket ship with a ton of resources and board it with all of your Gidgets to win the game.